Full disclosure: Length of Hike: 1.5 miles to Corona Arch; allow 2 hours round trip. Type of Hike:

Constructed trail and slickrock. This is a hiking-only trail. Area Attractions: Corona Arch (140 by 105 foot opening) and adjacent Bow Tie Arch; also views of the Colorado River and a large slickrock canyon. Trailhead: Utah Scenic Byway 279, 10 miles west of Utah 279/U.S. 191 junction. This 1.5 mile trail wanders over a slickrock landscape, marked with cairns, making it easy to follow. The trail gains 440 feet in elevation, most of it coming on a few short, steep scrambles equipped with steel cables (a trail version of handrails) for support. From the Corona Arch Trailhead, follow the trail as it climbs east to a BLM register and across the railroad tracks. After crossing the railroad tracks follow an old eroded road bed through a gap in the slickrock bench above. After reaching the top of the bench the route follows a trail of cairns (little piles of rock) northeast towards the base of a large sandstone cliff. Follow the base of the cliff east to a safety cable that protects a slightly exposed section of trail. After the first safety cable, continue to follow the base of the cliff to a second safety cable with steps carved into the sandstone. From the top of the steps, continue east, climb a short ladder up over a ledge and follow the cairns up to the top of a large bench. From this point, it is easy to walk along the wide slickrock bench, beneath Bowtie Arch, and on to the base of Corona Arch. The length of this trail and the need to climb ladders and use safety cables are things you need to consider. Children as young as five have done this trail without difficulty, while grown adults have not wanted to go up the second safety cable section.

- BYO craft circle at the pavilion for those relaxing in camp or free time on your own
- Blu Pig catered dinner, tentatively followed by potluck dessert with the 4 Corners Unit

Sunday: So long for now - see you down the road!
